Fremantle aquaculture company Cell Aquaculture has recruited marketing specialist Dale Harris to drive the international markets for the listed company's land-based seafood production system.

Mr Harris ran the global marketing program for US animal health company Alpharma Animal Health's growth efficiency product in Asia, Latin America and the US.

The September 11 terrorist attacks prompted Mr Harris to return to Australia and after a stint with Australian animal health company

Jurox, Mr Harris accepted an offer from Cell Aquaculture to become its Australian sales manager.

Cell Aquaculture has spent the past eight years developing a recirculating aquaculture system for land-based aquaculture.

Mr Harris said this unique tank produced a big quantity of high-quality fish from a very small area.

"We set up the systems but we also own hatcheries, so we breed the barramundi and send the little fish, the fingerlings, to our licensees and joint venture partners," he said.

Cell Aquaculture's customers can then ensure their retail clients fresh produce because the fish are grown right on their doorstep.

The company has already built a production facility in the Netherlands.
